Say that I had done a bit of work on a project. I made a few commits to the project before work was completed on some other features. While I was working on the changes I made I updated my working copy, checked in my changes and committed them. Now I am ready to complete the next set of features, should I commit my changes that were already checked in or make new commits to my working copy that are to be checked in and are not yet complete? A: You should commit your working copy changes, and the (presumably) previously checked in and committed 'ready for review' (although if something went wrong, you would be able to just revert the latest commit in your working copy in the future, at which point you would not need to resolve any conflicts in the next commit). Anything that is not part of your working copy changes should be committed, such as a new branch. As a developer, I don't like to commit everything, but I don't like to commit nothing (if you want to maintain and contribute to a project then you need to commit the working copy so that you can go back to the old versions) using System.Collections.Generic; using System.Web.Http; using System.Web.Mvc; using System.Web.Optimization; using System.Web.Routing; namespace GridWithMenu_WebSite { public class FilterConfig { public static void RegisterGlobalFilters(GlobalFilterCollection filters) { filters.Add(new HandleErrorAttribute()); } public static void RegisterRoutes(RouteCollection routes) 1cb139a0ed
