The dog days of summer are always busy and as we enter the big 40's with every passing day the fall can be a big challenge for some owners. There are the outside activities, holiday parties, and of course the small occasions that are hard to remember when or where they happen. However, when it comes to the photography topic, the summer is a great time to get up close and personal with your dogs and to learn a new perspective on them. But what about the leaves? You know I'm going to ask about those, aren't I? Yes, the leaves! How do you capture fall foliage? What do you focus on? The months of September through November bring the change of foliage to the mid-Atlantic region and often the foliage is in high proportion. Foliage colors tend to transition to reds and oranges before the month's end. An important part of fall is to capture this change with appropriate lighting. Part of it is timing. Working with the sun at high noon and early and late in the day produces beautiful results but not much in between
