It might prove useful for those who are late for work and need to log on in their multiple tools fast....Q: Recursive generic mapping function I'm working on a generic mapping function in Entity Framework. The goal is to support different database schemas and different 'association' types. I've defined a type `MapOptions` that contains various properties, like the type of the source/target element (for example, if the source is an entity, the target should be the entity property) or the type of the relationship (for example, if the source is a navigation property, the target is the navigation property). Now I have a generic function like the following (it is a simplified example):

public T Mapping(DbContext context, IMappingOptions options, object source, Func target) where T :

class { // Some common options, like if the source is an entity var contextOptions = con text.Configuration.Properties.W here(p => p.Name.Contains("AI GRIDContext")).ToList(); var options = new MappingOptions();
options.Context = context;
options.ContextOptions = contextOptions; options.Source = source; options.Target = target; // Some more options that we don't need //... var dbOptions = new DbContextOptionsBuilder(); dbO ptions.UseSqlServer(options.Co
```

```
connectionString); var dbContext = new DbContext(dbOptions.Options);
dbContext.Configuration.AutoDe tectChangesEnabled = false;
var mappedObject = context.Se t().SingleOrDefault(source); if (options.SourceType == typeof(NavigationProperty
