to use the sites as a way of spreading their own influence. A new site called "CockyDate" lets people create "free online dates" with complete strangers from across the Internet. The rules seem to be: the girl has to be on the site — known to its users as "Cocky.com" — to lure the man in; the man has to be good-looking; and they should send naked or semi-naked photos to each other, to be seen by millions of potential dates, to make sure that there's no one better-looking than him out there. Neither one has to reveal much information, but both are required to include a profile — especially important since the profiles allow a look at the person they've selected. On Cdate, which launched in late June, there are about 400,000 members, said founder and CEO Eric Wagner. He declined to reveal how many there are on Cocky.com, although he did say that the site is growing at a rate of about 20 per cent a week. CockyDate is an example of a new type of dating site, dubbed "social porn." It's a concept that's been gaining attention for the big gender-bending name of sites like OkCupid, Grindr and Y-rated profile site MingeMatch, which began offering video and audio profiles for members this year.

Rise of the "net nanny" What distinguishes social porn from typical adult site is the fact that people often have to deal with each other more deeply than just seeing through their profiles. In the case of CockyDate and

Cocky.com, that means chatting or meeting in person. Story
